ZAC'S KNACK GLAMOUR

BY JEANNE BEKER

When it comes to the red carpet, few do it better than American designer Zac Posen, who has dressed a galaxy of stars, from Gwyneth Paltrow and Natalie Portman to Beyoncé and Glenn Close.

In addition to helming his own successful label, Posen was named creative director of womenswear and accessories at Brooks Brothers in June.

Posen, who was raised in New York and moved to London at 18 to study at Central Saint Martins College of Arts and Design, is one of America's bestloved designers and with good reason. His love of the craft, attention to detail and personal panache have put him in a league of his own. I'll never forget the atmosphere at Posen's Spring 2002 New York Fashion Week debut, presented in a former synagogue on the Lower East Side. Awe was in the air as Posen sent out a brilliant collection of twirly dresses, and front row guests-Anna Wintour and her kids, artist Julian Schnabel, and Posen's pal Sophie Dahl—were swept away. The next day The New York Times proclaimed, "A star is born!"

This past spring, fashionable philanthropist Suzanne Rogers brought the 33 year old designer to Toronto for his first full-scale Canadian presentation. His inspiration for the season was the late, great American couturier Charles James, who's currently being honoured with a retrospective at New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art. At the opening gala in May, Posen's sumptuous gowns stole the show. I sat down with the talented designer to talk about glamour, and what being raised by an artist father taught him.

JB: You personify modern American glamour. But how would you describe it?

ZP: I think modern American glamour is something slightly nostalgic with a wow factor, but for me, it's really about strong, powerful women who are forces, who have great appreciation for the craft and empowerment of fashion, and what it can make you dream of. That's what it's about today, when you wear it, when you see it on the runway, you want to be transported. You want to dream. You want to say, "I can wear that and get everything I've always wanted." True glamour goes beyond the sparkle and the façade...it's about elegance and graciousness. Suzanne Rogers represents that to me.

JB: There are so many real women nowadays aspiring to look like celebs. What is the difference when you're dressing a star as opposed to a real-life woman?

ZP: I see the real-life women I dress as stars. Whether you're getting an Oscar or being a real woman, I have the same respect and my attention level is the same. You want to put the most care and nurturing into the relationships, to embrace and empower those women. I've always been drawn to people who have inner star quality, that pizzazz. And I hope I can bring that to other people.

JB: What about the vulnerabilities of some of these stars? ZP: You have to be a bit vulnerable to be a great actor and to be a great star. It's like being a super nova... But that supernova can sparkle and burn out too. It's a very fine balance. It can be nervous-making, but fashion can also make you strong. We've lived through good collections, bad collections, good reviews, bad reviews, good collections that get bad reviews, great sales seasons and not so good sales seasons. It's part of the flow. You just have to remain big picture about it and know that you want to be a long distance runner—that you want to bring wonderful collaborations with women into your life and you push for that. And you have to appreciate the small moments in life too, not just the big ones. If you do that, you can be a good businessperson and you can be a great creator.

JB: Your dad is an artist so you were exposed to so much growing up. How does that figure in the way you see the world today?

ZP: As I get older, it becomes more apparent how important and influential that's been for me. Looking at form, looking abstractly at life, being able to question ideals of beauty and process are really essential to me. I'm reactive, because my family really believes in art and the testament of art. Fashion has a whole commercial aspect to it too. And that's a little bit different. At an early age I knew I'd have to use everything I got every day to be able to create. The good and the bad of being an artist, being hard on yourself, never being satisfied, watching my dad know when to take the brush off the canvas and leave something in its moment. The emotional, creative aspect behind a piece I learned from my father.

SUMMER BODY TUNE-UP

From skimpy sundresses to swimsuits, there's plenty to feel self-conscious about when it comes to summer. But help is at hand: We quizzed dermatologists and cosmetic surgeons about the next generation of pro body treatments to help you to rock four of the season's less-forgiving key pieces

BY JILL DUNN

From #thighgap to #bikinibridge to @youdidnoteatthat, it's fair to say the beach-body obsession has gone the way of Extreme Makeover, at least as far as our Instagram feed is concerned. For the uninitiated (lucky you), the first two hashtags glorify skinny legs and protruding hipbones, while the third is a tongue-in-cheek stream of celebs, bloggers and models posing in selfies with pizza and cronuts—but only thing biting are the comments.

While operation #thighgap needs a serious reality check, there's no doubt that warm weather attire has a way of making us more closely examine what lies beneath. We've weighed the options and sleuthed out the latest non-invasive ways to look fresher, smoother or more taut in a flash-no matter what you fancy wearing. (Beauty PSA: Since sun exposure can undo all the good work of facial peels and lasers, summer is the perfect time to lay off them and focus your attention on body treatments.)

Procedure time Pollogen is billed as a lunch-hour treatment.

A series of six treatments spaced over several weeks is recommended for best results

The Crop Top

You want: A FLAT TUMMY

If you cringe at the thought of putting your midriff on display because of jelly belly, you may want to zap it.

The doctor's office fix: Pollogen radio-frequency treatments that target tummy fat deep below the surface. How it works: It doesn't get easier (or more painless) than this: you lie down while the device is guided over the tummy area. "This radiofrequency electricity causes non-destructive deep-tissue heating," says Dr. Diane Wong, a GP specializing in nonsurgical cosmetic treatments, who offers Pollogen at her Toronto clinic. "It stimulates and even regenerates the deep collagen, which contributes to tissue tightening.

Who it's best for: Those with a muffin top, not a spare tire. "It is ideal for someone who follows a healthy diet and has a good existing exercise regimen," says Dr. Wong. It's common to see a 2.5 centimetre reduction in circumference after one treatment: our tester found her tummy was trimmed by 3 centimetres. Who should skip it: Pregnant women, people who are obese and those with significant ill-cirrhosis or hepatitis. Downtime/drawbacks: No downtime or pain, but it's not a substitute for sit-ups.

JESSICA ALBA

The Grey Tee

You want: DRY PITS

If sweat stains on your favourite lightweight T-shirt are cramping your cool-girl style, you may want to laser your underarms.

The doctor's office fix: You've probably heard of Botox injections for perspiration-control (it temporarily blocks the brain's signals from the nerve to the sweat glands), but now there's a new laser treatment, Precision Tx, to ward off telltale wet patches for three years or more

At-home alternative Minimize skin irritation with an antiperspirant that also moisturizes the delicate underarm area. Dove Go Sleeveless Soothing Chamomile Scent Anti-Perspirant, $5, at drugstores

How it works: "We use thermally controlled laser energy to ablate the sweat glands," says Dr. Sean Rice, a cosmetic surgeon who is one of the first to introduce the laser in his Toronto practice. A local anaesthetic is applied, a 2 millimetre incision is made under each armpit to insert a tiny plastic tube that channels the laser energy and 20 minutes later you're on your way to an 80 per cent reduction in perspiration. Who it's best for: Anyone self-conscious about excessive sweating or more serious hyperhidrosis. Who should skip it: If you're worried about perspiration in other areas like hands or feet, this isn't for youright now it's only for underarms. Downtime/drawbacks: A little bruising or discomfort is common at the incision site. "A small number of patients have to wait several months to see full results and an even smaller number experience a temporary over-activity in the remaining sweat glands," says Dr. Rice. "But this always subsides.

MINDY

The Short Onesie

You want: PERFECT PINS

If brief hemlines have you craning to examine the backs of your legs in the mirror, you might want some help to ditch the dimples.

The doctor's office fix: Velashape, which combines radio frequency, infrared light and manual massage to treat cellulite. How it works: It breaks apart the tightly wound bands of fibrous tissue that hold the fat together, "It's not about fat melting; it's about disrupting the fat cells and redistributing them," says Dr. Tina Alster, a Washington, D.C.-based dermatologist and a pioneer in laser skin treatments. "The heat from the radio frequency and infrared light energies help to remould the fat and build up the collagen layer to smooth skin Who it's best for: Those fixated on avoiding the orangepeel effect. "Velashape has been on the market for a while but it's still one of the most effective treatments I use in my practice to target cellulite," says Dr. Alster. Who should skip it: Pregnant women, diabetics, people with blood-clotting conditions and anyone who suffers from photosensitivity or takes photosensitizing drugs. Downtime/drawbacks The manual stimulation can cause discomfort in some patients. And there's no permanent magic bullet for cellulite, so even though you'll see results initially, you'll have to keep up periodic treatments in order to maintain them.

Procedure time Depending on the size of the area you want

The Scoop-Back Dress

You want: A SMOOTH BACK

Breakouts are bad enough from the neck up, but if bacne surfaces when you're summer-wedding bound, it's a beauty 911 situation.

The doctor's office fix: A tailored combination of a chemical peel to improve skin tone and clear pores and laser or photodynamic light therapy to kill acne-causing

How it works: "AHA or BHA chemical peels are the preferred approach to treating body acne," says Vancouver dermatologist Dr. Jason Rivers, explaining that peels open up pores to reduce pus, blackheads and whiteheads, but don't kill bacteria. "Although lasers can be used for acne, there is no strong data to show that they have a long-term effect. Photodynamic therapy using red/ blue light in combination with a topical activating medicine can provide temporary improvement as well. Who it's best for: Those with active acne flareups or residual scarring on the chest or back. Who should skip it: "Tanned skin or people of colour need to be treated cautiously with lasers because a change in pigment-either darker or lightermay ensue," says Dr. Rivers.

Downtime/drawbacks: Your skin may be pink or red for several hours. "Post treatment, skin is more sun sensitive. Wear a sunscreen of SPF 30 or more,"

says Dr. Rivers. DIANE KRUGER

Procedure time Block off an hour. A series of four to six treatments at two-week intervals is recommended.

Makeup guru Pat McGrath teaches us what to do-and what not to do-to get the porcelain complexions of the Victoria Beckham and Valentino fall runways

BY RANI SHEEN

Foundation has long inspired a love-hate relationship—the risk of a muddy, twotone-jawline and pancake face is all too real—so it's no wonder we all jumped on the BB cream train when it came along. While tinted moisturizers and BBs excel in some areas (luminosity and sheerness), they fall short in others (coverage that lasts past lunchtime). But what if it wasn't the foundation that was the problem all along, but the application? Read on for P&G global creative design director McGrath's dos and don'ts to getting a fresh flawless finish every time.

1. DON'T skip the skin-prep step.

"Skin-care products are crucial before makeup, as they help form the canvas on which to build the look. When your skin glows, makeup wears longer and better. Recently I've been using the Olay Regenerist Luminous line. Most people wash and moisturize their face (I hope, at least), but I don't think enough people are using serums and eye creams—these are equally, if not more important."

2. DON'T try to fill in your wrinkles. "Laughter lines and wrinkles are celebrated now more than ever-to age who have lines and wrinkles, it can be very hard finding a foundation, as most foundations can enhance the look of dry skin and wrinkles. Don't try to use makeup to fill in your wrinkles, instead, choose a product that is designed to move with your skin." 3. DO combine tools.

gracefully is a sign of being comfortable in your own skin. For women

"You can use either a foundation brush, which creates a sheer effect resulting in superb coverage, but make sure you're light-handed with your strokes. Or use a sponge, which creates a more transparent coverage. You can also use your fingertips to blend the foundation to help it settle into the skin in a natural way. The heat from your fingertips polishes the foundation and gives a translucent finish that is impossible to create using sponges or puffs. If you want the best of all applications, combine all three tools.'

4. DON'T apply concealer before

"After the foundation step, you should assess your face to see where concealer is really needed. Use the concealer as a highlighter as well, to brighten areas of your face and add depth and dimension."

$5.\,DO$ set with pressed powder.

"I like to set the foundation and concealer with a light pressed powder. A supersized blending brush is a key tool for achieving a perfect complexion swirl the brush lightly over the entire face and neck to remove excess powder and soften any contour shadows."

PAT'S PICKS:

BB UPGRADE

"BB creams are great, but the coverage and level of moisturization is generally light er. What's amazing about this foundation is that it has the powerful hydrating effects of a night cream and it won't cake or build up. It plumps and lifts, which is an upgrade from a BB cream.

Disturbing newsflash: You may be washing your face at the expense of the fish. The plastic microbeads used in exfoliators are killing waterdwelling wildlife, but fear not, there are all sorts of natural alternatives

BY NATASHA BRUNO

We love a good skin-renewing exfoliator, but did you know that your favourite facial scrub could contain environment-harming microbeads? These smooth plastic particles are made from polyethylene or polypropylene, the same synthetic ingredients used to make shopping bags.

Once embraced by the beauty industry for their ability to polish away dead skin, these tiny spheres are rapidly showing up on environmentalists' Most Wanted lists due to recent discoveries that the nonbiodegradable plastic pellets are polluting our lakes and oceans. Because of their minuscule size—less than one millimetre and ability to absorb toxic chemicals in water like a sponge, microbeads are slipping through sewage filtration systems, and posing extreme health risks to marine life such as fish and seabirds that easily swallow them. A report recently published by the U.N. Environment Programme says plastic waste causes $13 billion in damage to marine life every year.)

In June Illinois state government was the first worldwide to take action, banning the sale of personal care products containing microbeads, with New York, California and Ohio to follow suit.

We've rounded up our top five scrubs that use natural and biodegradable skinsmoothing alternatives, so you can have a clear conscience as well as clear skin.
