LINE WE LOVE

Bags of texture

It was at a well-curated Etsy event that we discovered Montrealbased designer Noémie Vaillancourt's line, Noémiah, which launched this month. The striking shapes of her bags feature modern, clean lines and textures so interesting we had to pick them up and admire them. "I was obsessed with geometric shapesespecially for bags, and fabric doesn't give you that structure," says Vaillancourt. She looked to fellow Etsy designer and woodworker Violaine Tetreault for help. Their combination of vegetable-tanned leather and maple wood gives the bags a muted neutral colour palette and lets the shapes and textures sing. "The cylinder seemed like the perfect shape for us," says the designer.

Vaillancourt launched a jewellery line in 2008, but after four years she was looking for a new challenge. Having never sewn anything in her life, she took courses on pattern-making, sewing and design.

During her studies, she interned with Montreal-based designer Travis Taddeo, who is best known for his luxe sportwear collection. "His team does almost everything in-house, which means that when you work on his team you have to be able to hand-sew silk, cut leather or sew jersey," says Vaillancourt. "I learned to work with the most delicate materials, and most importantly to have fun with fashion."

That sense of whimsy has not been lost in her debut clothing collection; beyond her cool-girl handbags, her line contains billowy dresses printed with vintage bathing beauties and crop tops adorned with hummingbirds. "I imagine a beautiful lady riding her bike with the backpack or someone heading to a cocktail soirée in one of my dresses," says Vaillancourt. So do we.

TALKING POINT

DON'T SWEAT THE SWEATS

Eva Mendes caused a frenzy last month while promoting her cosmetics line, Circa. Asked about her style, she said, "You can't do sweatpants. Ladies, number one cause of divorce in America: Sweatpants." While she's not the first to express distaste for the casual staple (cough, Karl Lagerfeld), her joke caused a backlash, with women commenting that they should be able to wear what they want. Ryan Gosling came to his baby mama's rescue, tweeting, "Obviously [the] sweatpants thing was a joke. Wearing them now," Mendes apologized to her "favorite pair of sweatpants" on Instagram, saying, "I was just kidding when I said you're the #1 cause of divorce. Everyone knows that orange crocs are the #1 cause of divorce." The takeaway: Don't mess with athleisure wear.

WEDDING ERAGRANCE

Nuptial notes

Your special day deserves a special scent, and one fragrance writer is especially qualified to help make it a choice you'll remember—even if she's forgotten her own...

BY DEBORAH FULSANG

I have been writing about fragrance for the better part of 20 her wedding day," says Aerin, 45, who lives in New York City. years. I revel in the history, the mythology, the science, the beauty, the art and the sensuality of scent.

You'd think, then, that I would remember what fragrance I wore on my wedding day. I've been asked, several times. I tell the story of my eloping to Venice, of the trains, of my husband carrying a Lida Baday wedding dress in a big white box on a vaporetto water taxi. But I'm embarrassed to say that I don't know what perfume I wore.

You see, I'm non-monogamous when it comes to scent. Thankfully, my 16-year marriage enjoys more loyalty.

A wedding-day fragrance, though, one should remember. It should express the most beautiful, nuanced, concentrated essence of yourself. Royals take this sentiment very seriously: In 1853, Princess Eugénie de Montijo had Guerlain make Eau de Cologne Impériale specially for her wedding to French emperor Napoléon III. Grace Kelly wore Creed's Fleurissimo, a scent commissioned by her betrothed, when she married Prince Rainier III of Monaco in 1956.

And when the news finally broke about which perfume Kate Middleton wore for her 2011 wedding to Prince William, the Daily Mail reported that every bottle of her chosen scent-White Gardenia Petals by British brand Illuminum—flew off the shelves within minutes.

"It's a special day of your life; it's like a performance. You want to wear something with symbolism," says perfumer Francis Kurkdjian, who has mixed custom fragrances for brides. "Maybe wear the scent of your man. The possibilities are endless if you are creative."

Stevie Gorrie chose to purchase a new scent for her wedding this past summer, which took place in an 11th-century castle in Germany. "It took hours," laughs the 31-year-old Toronto-based creative director. "I think I smelled every fragrance in the store." Her selection: Salvatore Ferragamo's Signorina Eleganza. "It is romantic and elegant, with flowers plus grapefruit and pear to keep it from being too sweet," she says. Just like her dress-a pale blush-coloured mermaid gown. Gorrie's olfactory memories of the day encompass more than perfume, though. "It's old classical buildings, remnants of cigarette smoke and an after-the-rain smell," she says. "That combination will always come to mind when I think of Europe and now of my wedding."

Aerin Lauder went for nostalgia when she got married in 1996: She wore her grandmother Estée Lauder's fragrance Beautiful. "My grandmother created it to celebrate a bride on

"It was one of her favourite fragrances and some of my earliest memories are of her wearing it." Aerin's latest scent, Rose de Grasse, seems tailor-made for a bride. "It highlights the rose, a timeless symbol of beauty and femininity," she says. It's not a coincidence that her own countryside nuptials featured that regal bloom. "I can still remember the scent of the fresh garden roses during the ceremony. They were all around us." I've racked my brain to remember the scent that surrounded me on my wedding day in Venice. It might have been Old World romantic Vol de Nuit by Guerlain; Comme des Garçons 2, with its intoxicating spices and woods; or the water-inspired L'Eau d'Issey. All three would have suited the moment when I walked hand in hand with my then-new husband over the bridges of the Grand Canal, my skirt sweeping the sidewalk. The truth is I don't know. But like most brides, my wedding day holds a complex, romantic scent memory: wet stone, centuries-old wood, espresso and salty sea air. That is a cherished bouquet that I'll never forget. Just don't ask me to name his cologne.

Say yes to the dress

Your mailbox filling up with save-the-dates and shower invites is a clue that wedding season is about to begin, and it's not just the bride who has to think about her outfit. We turned to British clothier Ted Baker (whose third Canadian location is opening June 17 at the Pacific Centre in Vancouver), known for its impressive selection of polished dresses, to get us ready. While Ted Baker offers several silhouettes, from the midi-length bodycon shift to the Bohemian maxi, the fit-andflare shape is a returning favourite every season for its ultra-flattering silhouette and versatility. The secrets to keeping this tried-and-true look fresh: Quirky on-trend prints, luxe embellishment like sheer lace and clever colour blocking. With a second capsule collection of dresses arriving in stores May 2, RW&Co.'s collaboration with glossy mag Elle Canada arrives just in time for Canadian wedding guests to plan their outfits. Relying on the magazine's fashion director, Denis Desro, to champion a new look, the line features modern plunging necklines, Italian-sourced fabrics and prints designed in-house. Even at a slightly higher price point, the first collection was a success. "RW&CO. is going through an evolution," says Alain Lessard, vice president of merchandising for the brand. The top seller was the Windsor, Ont., location, which needed replenishment stock weekly.
